Love Shouldn't Hurt is a youth-led Jewish dating violence prevention program. One in four Jewish women will be emotionally, sexually or physically abused in a relationship during her lifetime. Young women in dating relationships are not immune—yet young people are often not given the tools to recognize abusive behavior, nor the skills or self-esteem for building loving, respectful relationships. That’s why in 2002 Shalom Bayit created Love Shouldn’t Hurt. Our goals are to increase awareness in the Jewish community about dating violence; help young people recognize abusive behavior; teach elementary through college aged Jewish youth the skills to build loving, respectful relationships; give them the knowledge and tools they need to make healthy relationship choices; teach them to become allies in healthy relationships; and educate parents and teachers to successfully offer assistance with the difficult relationship issues facing youth today.

Love Shouldn’t Hurt’s main program consists of healthy relationships workshops in synagogues, religious schools, Jewish day schools, summer camps, and Shules, providing information about relationship abuse and tools to promote healthy relationships and consent from a Jewish perspective. Since 2002 over 16,000 young people have participated in these interactive, educational workshops. Topics include building blocks of healthy relationships, understanding “true consent”, communication skills, self esteem, setting boundaries, identifying warning signs, recognizing abusive/controlling behaviors, power and control issues, and forms of abuse—from verbal abuse to sexual harassment. All are framed within Jewish values. Our workshops help students build resiliency by promoting internal protective factors, such as the ability to make sound decisions, take responsibility, set limits, and know when and how to reach out for help. We reach those at risk and those who have been victimized, opening dialogue for youth to talk about their relationships and learn how to help themselves or a friend.

We also have companion workshops for parents and educators (teachers, camp counselors, youth leaders) to learn strategies for abuse prevention, successful identification and intervention, and role modeling/teaching building blocks to help young people develop healthy relationships. We have reached over 2,400 parents and youth leaders. Other programs include our website www.shalom-bayit.org providing educational information about Jewish teen dating violence, peer counseling for teens and parents of teens, and consultations to teachers/rabbis/educators handling situations of abuse.

The Love Shouldn’t Hurt curriculum is available for purchase. The published version includes a facilitators’ guide, four core workshop units (middle school, high school, college, and parents), options for “stage II” follow up workshops/activities, Jewish teachings on relationships, bibliography, resources, and reproducible handouts and evaluations. To order Love Shouldn’t Hurt, call (510) 845-8874 or email info@shalom-bayit.org

At the heart of Love Shouldn’t Hurt is our youth leadership development component, building a new generation of young people with a deep commitment to ending abuse. The internship program mentors and trains young people to become dating violence peer educators. Interns can receive 40 hours of intensive domestic violence training and “on-the-job” mentoring; conduct outreach to synagogues and day schools; and facilitate healthy relationships workshops. In addition, they gain skills in program development as well as a sense of empowerment and meaningful work experience in the Jewish community. As testimony to the success of the internship program, many former interns have remained committed to the issue of violence prevention long after their internship ended, and several have gone on to choose related careers in the field of domestic violence. The experience they received here becomes a force for social change.

Together, the components of Love Shouldn’t Hurt place abuse prevention squarely at the center of Jewish youth programming, strengthening our community by teaching youth, adults, and community leaders to prevent abuse before it starts.

PO Box 2883 © Berkeley, CA 94702 © Toll free helpline: (866) SHALOM-7 © Business office: (510) 845-8874